KARAS, Nicholas

Former Orient resident Nicholas Karas died Aug. 11 in Center Moriches. He was 81 years old. He was born Dec. 13, 1931, in Binghamton, N.Y., to Stephen and Anna (Nider) Karas. He served in the Navy's amphibious forces from 1951 to 1954, during the Korean conflict. He attended St. Lawrence and Johns Hopkins universities, where he majored in biological sciences, and Syracuse University, where he earned a master's degree in journalism. Mr. Karas became the outdoors editor for True magazine, then Argosy magazine. Later, he became a full-time freelance writer, traveling the world for nearly a decade and producing more than 500 magazine features. For 25 years, he was the outdoors columnist for Newsday, writing over 3,500 columns, followed by 10 years as a freelance columnist for The New York Times and several major magazines. He wrote his first novel, "Hunky," after being inspired by James Michener to "write what he knew best." His novel "The Last Whaler" reflected his love for the sea. He held his captain's license for 30 years and was an ichthyologist who regularly fished the offshore waters of Long Island. Mr. Karas is survived by his wife, Shirley; his sons, Kenneth, of Belize, Steven, of Hopewell Junction, N.Y., and Michael, of Manhattan; his sister, Anne Teisi of Nebraska; and five grandchildren. Funeral arrangements were handled by Reginald H. Tuthill Funeral Home in Riverhead. Burial with Navy honors took place at Calverton National Cemetery. (The Suffolk Times, Suffolk, NY, August 13, 2013)

Nick Karas, Newsday outdoors columnist, dies at 81
Newsday sports writer Nick Karas.

Nick Karas' fishing columns and reports were so popular while he was writing for Newsday that he had to change the name of his boat when he went out on Long Island Sound. "He called it Fishday -- a combination of Newsday and fishing," his wife of 58 years, Shirley, said. "Everybody knew who it was and everybody just followed him. He had to change the name just so we could enjoy a little privacy when we went fishing." Karas, who was a full-time Newsday outdoors columnist from 1976 until 1997, died Sunday at his home in Orient. He was 81. "He definitely loved what he was doing," Shirley Karas said. "People were calling the house all the time asking him where the fish were biting. I put the phone in my name, but people figured it out."

According to Karas' son Steven, his father wrote more than 3,500 columns for Newsday, mostly about hunting and fishing. He also wrote more than a dozen books and numerous magazine articles. "He fished all over the world," Shirley Karas said, adding that for one of his two published novels, a fisherman's tale entitled "Hunky," he visited the book's setting, Ukraine, four times. "He was obsessed with accuracy," she said. Karas, who lived for many years in St. James, was born in Binghamton in 1931. After a tour of duty in the Navy, he attended St. Lawrence and Johns Hopkins universities, majoring in biological sciences. He received a master's in journalism at Syracuse University. After college, he joined the staff of True magazine and then became outdoors editor of Argosy magazine. He was a full-time freelancer traveling the world for more than a decade before joining Newsday. One of his books, "Brook Trout," published in 1997, is considered "the ultimate book" on the subject, according to Steven Karas, who said in an email to Newsday that another book, "The Striped Bass," had numerous reprints. In 2008, Nick Karas wrote a book called "Sight Fishing the Flats and Beyond," which was mainly based on his Long Island experiences. "He fished so much before his stroke 21/2 years ago," Shirley Karas said. "But what he got the biggest kick out of was putting people on the fish. I would always out-fish him, but he liked that. He was all about the thrill of the hunt." In addition to his wife and son, Karas is survived by sons Kenneth and Michael, and five granddaughters. Burial will be in Calverton National Cemetery after a private family funeral.

MARCINKO, George

Mount Vernon Man is Latest Bronx River Parkway Tragedy By Phil Reisman Staff Writer

A 65-year-old Mount Vernon man became the second pedestrian to be struck and killed within nine hours trying to cross the Bronx River Parkway on Tuesday. Bronx police said the latest victim, George Marcinko of 2 North St., was apparently dazed and disoriented when he stepped out onto the parkway in the Bronx at 5:10 a.m. and was hit by a car in the northbound lane about one-half mile north of Gun Hill Road. "The driver said he was going along when all of a sudden he saw the man and had to stop" Officer John Moore said "He (Marcinko) flew up in the air and hit the windshield and shattered it." Marcinko was pronounced dead at Misericordia Hospital at 6:15 a.m., according to a hospital spokeswoman. No charges were filed against the driver, 44-year-old Robert Finch of the Bronx, who was unhurt. Moore said he is investigating why Marcinko was in the road so far from home and speculated that he may have been listed as a missing person. At 9 p.m. Monday, the badly torn body of a 70-year-old man was found in the southbound lanes of the parkway in Yonkers. He had apparently been hit by one car and run over by several others. Westchester County Police identified him as Edward Lewis of 61 Edgewood Ave. in Yonkers.
